Spring Communications Expands Corporate Office

SALT LAKE CITY – Spring Communications, a Cingular Wireless retailer, has just completed a major expansion of their corporate headquarters in Salt Lake City. The expansion comes after only four years in operation and just over a year in their current space.

With an increase of corporate employees, the need for the expansion was imperative. Over fifteen employees have been hired in the last year at the corporate level, more than doubling the office staff. Space for new employees was becoming an ever persistent problem. With the expansion, the office now has three additional conference rooms, four more enclosed offices, and six more opened office cubicles; a total addition of 2100 square feet to their existing space.

“I believe strongly that every person needs to have a place that is theirs, where they can work comfortably and productively,” said Vern Dickman, Spring Communications founder and CEO.

The expansion is ideal for teamwork. Each department has a separate area where employees are in close enough proximity to community and work as teams. This current expansion will allow for future employee growth to align with Spring’s current retail growth rate.

About Spring Communications
